There has been a great deal of development in Houghton recently. The pressure for more development within the village is considerable. The Houghton Neighbourhood plan gives a reasoned response to over-development of the area highlighting the rural nature of its surroundings in particular the Test Valley, an area of outstanding natural beauty.

Of particular note is that Houghton does not have either mains drainage or a gas main supply and there are no plans to install either. This means all development in the village carries an extra burden of needing road traffic to deliver Oil, Gas and to remove sewage waste. This increases the carbon footprint of all the houses contained within the neighbourhood plan and any new development. The run off to the drainage fields must be having an effect on the water table and ground water in the village, little of it being treated. Are all the new houses heated by air source, ground source or helped by solar power? I don't think so. While the solar farm within the neighbourhood plan is welcome it is not reducing the villages carbon footprint directly, this is being increased yearly due to more development.

I hope the village will be protected in future to improve its impact on the environment rather than adversely affect it
